

GVPT 449K, Politics Through Popular Fiction and Short Stories, Fall, 2016

Professor Alford, 1151 Tydings. Office Hrs, Tu, 5-6pm, Thur 5-7pm, and by appointment. Call x54169 and leave a message. Email works even better: calford@umd.edu. Come visit; too few students do. Also, feel free to email me with comments, suggestions, gripes. I need the feedback. I often meet with graduate students, and occasionally have committee meetings during office hours (it can't be helped), so please make an appointment. Feel free to drop by, but understand I might be meeting with another student, or in an unavoidable meeting.

The course is not organized around ELMS/Canvas, but around the seminar. Nevertheless, the discussion section on ELMS/Canvas plays an important role in the course, as you will see. It is also a good way to reach other students in the course. Be sure and check your .umd email, or have a good repeater/email forwarding.

Basics

Course meets: Tue, 6:30-9:15pm

ELMS website for this course: www.elms.umd.edu

Communication: It is probably best to contact me by email directly, but you can also do so through the course website. I will do the same, especially if we miss a class. This is especially important for a course that meets only once a week.

Main Idea of the Course

I have chosen books and short stories that are "popular" rather than "literary," though many are both. None are terribly long, and all are quite accessible to undergraduates. You probably have read some already.

In one way or another, all the books and short stories in this course are all about outsiders. Some are outsiders by choice, most not. Each is an outsider in a different way. Pecola, the protagonist of Toni Morrison's The Bluest Eye, a young black girl finally driven mad, only wants to be white. Ben, of Doris Lessing's Ben in the World, only wants to find somewhere he belongs. Albert Camus' Meursault does not understand his own difference, a misrecognition that will kill him. The man killed by Meursault does not even have a name. The narrators in Redeployment all seem to have become outsiders, but maybe not.

Politics may be defined as the power to put some people on the outside in order to remain on the inside. Some people, but not all (not Pecola, for example) choose to remain on the outside. Why this is the case, and what this means, we will consider. From one perspective, one might simply say that this is the position from which the writer finds it most comfortable to write.

We are reading literature, but we will not, for the most part, take a literary approach, emphasizing symbolism, and so forth. Sometimes, however, a literary approach will prove helpful, such as looking for absent voices. Generally, however, we will read these novels and short stories in a relatively straightforward way, asking what they have to say about life today. Not every novel or short story is contemporary, but most are. Three are science fiction, but not of the usual variety. All speak to contemporary themes, such as alienation, exclusion, sexism, racism, war, and loss. These are political themes. We will see parts of a video.

Along the way we will discuss what makes these stories political, for none are obviously political in the way George Orwell's Nineteen Eight-Four is political. One way to think about the politics of these stories is in terms of the category of micro-politics, the power positions and ploys among small groups, including friends. You are involved in micro-politics every day. Another way to think about politics is that it reflects and reinforces the culture we live in. Hema, a character in Unaccustomed Earth, is strengthened and constrained by her cultural tradition. Politics is also about the power to make some people disappear, like Pecola, or "the Arab" in The Stranger. This is at least a beginning way to think about the politics of the books we will read.

Principles of Course Organization

1. Each week each student will make a comment on ELMS/Canvas on the reading for the week. Each student is required to make 10 comments during the semester. There will be 13-14 opportunities to comment, so you need not comment every week. Please note how important the quality of these comments are to your final grade. You will post your comments on the discussion board on Canvas/Elms.

The comments will be open to all the students in the course. The comments will be due on Monday at 6pm, so that everyone has a chance to read and digest the comments by class on Tuesday. The comments will be open to all, and you may politely comment on others' comments, but make sure to contribute your own "added value" from the book. I imagine the comment should be about 1-3 paragraphs long. It is not a summary, but your informed reaction to what you have read, your reaction to a classmate's reaction based on your reading of the book, or both. We will discuss the comments in class.

Because this is not always easy, I have provided "prompts," or selected points to comment on in the syllabus. I may provide more on ELMS/Canvas.

Please note that because we will be meeting only once a week, this aspect of the course is vital, lest the continuity of the class be lost. If I find your comments lacking, I will speak to you privately.

2. We will usually spend one class per book (or triplet of short stories), sometimes two. The student presentation should take about an hour, and will generally be at the beginning of class. The goal is for the presenters to lead a discussion of the book. Presentations will be in groups of 2-3 students. Each student may make more than one presentation. No power-points, please. You may present a little background material, but your principle task is to have a series of questions prepared for the class, and be prepared to step-in and discuss between yourselves if necessary.

3. Speaking of power-points. This class will meet in seminar format. Please do not use your computer. If for some reason you must use your computer, please talk to me about it, and I will put you on a list of users. Obviously, no little screens or devices please. If you read your text on a smart phone, let me know. If you are reading the book in e-book format, and need the reader in class, tell me.

4. I expect many of you to disagree with me, and with each other. That's fine, that's what this course is about. Part of tolerating, even celebrating difference, is learning how to disagree with others openly and civilly. The course is about that too.

Assignments and Grading

A. Two short 5 page class papers are assigned. Each class paper is worth 25% of your final grade, for a total of 50%. The topics of the papers are given in the syllabus.

B. Presentations are worth 15% of your final grade. You will receive an individual grade, even as you present in a group. Fifteen percent is the total of all your presentations.

C. Informed and thoughtful participation, which includes contributions to the ELMS discussion, contributes 35% of your final grade. That's a lot. I will pay particular attention to your weekly contributions on ELMS, which will be discussed in class. And remember, you can't participate if you are not in class, or don't contribute thoughtfully to the ELMS discussion.

The Course

Generally we will read a book a week. For a longer book we will spend two weeks. I present a general discussion question for each section. It is a guideline for discussion: class discussion and ELMS discussion.

A student once commented that this class "was like a book club." I don't know if this was compliment or criticism. I take it as a compliment, and hope we can reproduce that atmosphere.

I. When middle- class goes wild

Doris Lessing, The Fifth Child [1 week]

Doris Lessing, Ben in the World [1 week]

Two questions:

A. One of the most difficult things about both books is that they offer no sense of redemption. Is that how it works in real life. What's redemption (in a secular context)?

B. Who is Ben?

II. Outsiders and the invisible

Ishiguro, Never Let Me Go (2 weeks)

There is a pretty good movie based on this book (same title). Rent it. We will see a selection in class.

Who plays the role or performs the function of these "students" in our world?

Camus, The Stranger (1 week)

Is Meursault incredibly honest, incredibly alienated, or just weird? Or all three?

First Class paper (after 5 weeks of discussion). All these books are about outsiders. None seem to have much choice. What does one learn as an outsider that one cannot learn on the inside (that is, by being a normal everyday person)? What does it cost to be on the inside? You may consider the books separately or together or both. About 5 pages. Due Saturday, October 9, at 11:59pm on ELMS/Canvas.

III. Three Short Stories, first selection (one week)

Note: all short stories (with the exception of Lahiri and Klay) are from the collection ordered for this course, The Best American Short Stories of the Century, ed. Updike. It's a big, fat book, and you can rent it for $8.95 for the semester.

Susan Sontag, The Way We Live Now

Donald Barthelme, A City of Churches

Rosellen Brown, How to Win

What connects these stories? What disconnects them? How are they political?

V. Familiar Outsiders & and Immigrant Experience

Jhumpa Lahiri, Unaccustomed Earth (collected stories) (2 weeks)

Week 1, read Only Goodness, and Nobody's Business

Week 2, read all three Hema and Kaushik stories in part 2.

To me the characters in Lahiri's book are more familiar, and that brings a sense of comfort. Do you share that experience? Perhaps the comfortable familiarity is misleading?

VI. Three short stories, second selection (one week)

Tim O'Brien, The Things They Carried

Cynthia Ozick, The Shawl

Thom Jones, I Want to Live

Same question as before: What connects these stories? What disconnects them? How are they political?

VII. Redeployment, 2 weeks

Week 1: Redeployment, Frago, After Action Report, Bodies, Money as a Weapons System

Week 2: Prayer in the Furnace, Psychological Operations, War Stories, Unless It's a Sucking Chest Wound, Ten Kliks South

Most of these are pretty ugly war stories. What else are they? Who are the heroes? The villains?

NOTE: Be aware that the narrator changes in each of Klay's stories. And don't worry too much about all the abbreviations.

In addition, we will compare Tim O'Brien's story of the Vietnam War, The Things They Carried, with Klay's stories. I will also put another O'Brien story for you to read on ELMS/Canvas, or point you to a website. (You won't have to buy another book.) The idea is to compare authors as well as wars.

VII. To Be Cast Aside to Die

Toni Morrison, The Bluest Eye (1 week)

The novel is horrifying, and yet the people in it retain their humanity, even the worst ones. Is that how it works? Could one imagine this novel not being about African-Americans, or would that destroy it? Morrison has said her books are about love. How can that be? ps, More than one character was cast aside to die.

VIII. Three short stories, third selection (1 week)

Lorrie Moore, You're Ugly, Too

Gish Jen, Birthmates

Pam Houston, The Best Girlfriend You Never Had

Compare and contrast one or more of these stories to one or more of the stories by Jhumpa Lahiri. If you can, try to compare one of the stories to one in Klay's Redeployment.

IX. Class Discussion: what makes these stories political?

Address this question in your post for the week. A short story to discuss will be made available on Canvas/Elms.

Second Class Paper. Discuss the novels and stories that meant the most to you (2 or 3 are enough). State why, and then discuss whether there are any similarities among the stories. There need not be. About 5 pages. Due Saturday, December 10, at 11:59 on ELMS/Canvas. A reminder: this is a class paper. Since this course will be taught as a seminar, there is no final paper or final exam.

Other Class Matters

Absences: if you miss one course due to illness, notify me before class if at all possible. When you return, sign a note to documenting your own illness. I remind you that doing so falls under the student honor code. The same goes for the grave illness of a parent, and so forth. Your own signed documentation will suffice the first time. If you miss class due to a university sanctioned activity, bring a note.

If you miss a class on which you have a presentation due, or you fail to hand in a paper on time due to illness, I will require a medical excuse.

If you miss a series of classes due to a serious illness, keep in contact with me, and provide medical documentation when you return

If you observe religious holidays not officially recognized by the University, let me know and I will make every effort to accommodate you. But, please let me know at the beginning of the semester.

If you have a learning disability or other problem that needs my attention, let me know and I will make every effort to accommodate you.

Please review the Code of Academic Integrity at UMCP. <http://www.shc.umd.edu>.

To learn more about course related policies at UMCP, go to the webpage <http://www.ugst.umd.edu/courserelatedpolicies.html>

Required Books

Doris Lessing, The Fifth Child

Doris Lessing, Ben in the World

Kazuo Ishiguro, Never Let Me Go

Albert Camus, The Stranger

The Best American Short Stories of the Century, ed. Updike.

Jhumpa Lahiri, Unaccustomed Earth

Phil Klay, Redeployment

Toni Morrison, The Bluest Eye

A couple of other readings will be available through Canvas or the Web.